ABSTRACT

Vocabulary is one of important aspects in learning English. Unfortunately, there are some problems on its teaching and learning process. The students, for example, have difficulties in remembering some English words. They also seem to feel bored in the learning process as a monotonous method that is used by the teacher. To solve these problems, the teacher can use Numbered Head Together (NHT) method. Some experts believe that this method provides various benefits for learning vocabulary, such as prompting the students to be more active, increasing their motivation in learning, and creating attractive atmosphere in the learning process. This study attempts to investigate more about the effectiveness of Numbered Head Together (NHT) method in improving students' vocabulary mastery. The method used was quantitative method with one group pretest and posttest design. The population was students at SD IT Al Maqom. The sample was 34 fifth grade students. In collecting the data, test was used. The data was then analyzed by using SPSS version 23. The finding revealed that the Sig.(2 tailed) was lower than 0.05. it was 0.000. This meant that H_0 in this research was rejected. Numbered Head Together (NHT) method, in this case, was effective to be used in teaching vocabulary. Therefore, the teachers are recommended to use it in the classroom.
